

Update 12/9/2009: Witch buff

Written by Odinn

Wednesday, 09 December 2009 21:05 - Last Updated Wednesday, 09 December 2009 23:11

Update 12/9/2009:

- New mortal witch spell: profane litany.
- Mortal witches no longer have magic arrow. Witches now receive several abilities at an earlier level than before, to aid in the levelling process.

Profane litany:

Usage: cast 'profane litany' <target>

Usage: cast 'profane litany' (when already in battle, this ability will automatically target your opponent if no target is supplied)

Profane litany is a basic curse prevention ability. Its duration and prevention are constant and cannot be reduced through any means.

As one of the basic curses obtained by those who delve into the art of witchcraft, the profane litany is a popularly used malady. By no means, however, is it a weak affliction, for the litany draws its power from the deepest fiery planes.

The power of this curse is twofold. First, the witch's target will have his or her soul struck with a weakening enchantment, rendering the victim more vulnerable to magical damage. Second, through the use of the litany, the witch opens up a conduit to the deep planes of hell, gaining the ability to channel that hellfire through the 'fireball' spell.

Any use of the 'fireball' spell while the user possesses the 'hellfire vassal' effect has a chance of calling upon that link, sending forth an additional blast of hellfire. This hellfire blast is treated as an additional minor fireball in most ways; however, it is considered an unholy attack and it bypasses ALL immunities and resistances.

The power of this spell is based upon the caster's intellect, wisdom, and willpower. Mastery in this spell beyond 100% slowly improves its power, and grants each hellfire blast the potential to deal additional damage.

Update 12/9/2009: Witch buff

Written by Odinn

Wednesday, 09 December 2009 21:05 - Last Updated Wednesday, 09 December 2009 23:11
